PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE by Vince Sibona

Taking part and being active in your VHFC. What we would like is for more members to be more active. The board members offer many things, but maybe there are some other things we can offer. You can become involved by letting us know. We are always open to new suggestions, ideas and changes. By you coming to the meetings and taking part in discussions helps us to better understand how we can improve and make the VHFC even better. You may have questions that you would like us to answer. Of course you can always use the "Suggestion Box" which is at all of the meetings. Simply fill out a form and drop it in the box signed or unsigned. Every suggestion is reviewed and discussed at the next board meeting. Then it is presented to the members at the next general membership meeting. It's your fishing club. It's your choice. Why not participate?

Fluke fishing is improving in the ocean. More fluke are being caught, especially keepers.

ROD RAFFLE by Vince Sibona

The VHFC is raffling off another fishing rod this year, a beautiful 7 foot spinning rod for boat or surf. This is a custom rod made by Manny Silva who has made the other rods. The rod is valued at $400.00 and raffle tickets can be purchased for $5.00 each at the VHFC Meetings. It will be raffled off at the September Meeting. Winner need not be present. A portion of the proceeds will benefit the RFA. By purchasing one or more tickets, you will be supporting the VHFC and the RFA and have a chance to win this beauty.

POTS ON THE LITTLE EGG REEF by Bill Dabney

I went out to the LE reef on the 13th of July to find that some of the best structure in the middle of the reef could not be fished due to pot placement. The Kochka Tank area in the NE corner of the reef, named after a former president of the VHFC, which the club donated $300 to set the army tank in place and the rest of the tank area could not be fished due to pots in the area. Over the last 10 years the VHFC has donated over $1500 to set pieces of structure on the Barnegat Light Reef, Garden State South Reef and the Little Egg Reef and many of these reef areas cannot be fished due to long strings of pots.

I hope that the recreational fishing community and our local N. J. Senators and Assemblyman can pull together and get the "Pots Off the Reef Bill", A 1152, passed during the next legislative session so these reefs can once again be open for drift fishing as was their original intention.

RFA PRESS RELEASE by Jim Hutchinson, Jr.

'EVIL DEFENSE' LOBBY FIRM BUILDS FISHY CLIENT LIST

RFA Says Legislators Aren't Fooled By Mock Fishing Masqueraders

July 27, 2011 - Former New York Republican Congressman James Walsh is now lobbying his congressional friends in DC on behalf of catch shares and the privatization of our coastal fish stocks. According to the Legal Times, Walsh is among members of the K&L Gates government affairs practice who've notified Congress that they are now advocating for the South Atlantic Fishermen's Association, having received $10,000 from the group between April 1 and June 30 for its advocacy efforts.

The fishermen's group and their allies including the Fishermen's Marketing Association, Fishing Vessel Owners' Association and Gulf of Mexico Reef Fish Shareholders' Alliance, wrote in a letter to Congress in March that catch share programs "have a proven track record of success in U.S. fisheries, maintaining or restoring fish stocks and providing high-wage jobs for fishermen and processing workers."

Walsh who formerly served on the House Appropriations Committee is among a group of K&L Gates lobbyists who also represent the Environmental Defense Action Fund on fishery management programs. The firm received $170,000 from the organization during the first half of 2011 for its lobbying work, and the team of lobbyists now representing both Environmental Defense Fund (EDF) and the South Atlantic Fishermen's Association includes fellow K&L Gates staffers James Sartucci, Darrell Conner, W. Dennis Stephens, Yvette Wissmann and Dennis Potter.

According to the Recreational Fishing Alliance (RFA), the preservationist groups and their well-heeled corporate lobbyists appear to have strengthened forces on the front line and are readying their attack at the heart of the coastal fishing communities. "EDF has thrown a lot of money around the recreational and commercial fishing industry and it's become quite obvious to many U.S. legislators that EDF mercenaries are doing much of the campaign work," said Jim Donofrio, RFA's executive director. "This is not a grassroots effort, it's what folks in DC call astroturfing and is taken right out of the Pew Charitable Trusts playbook. Those who've spoken out against the 'Evil Defense' agenda can expect to get dirty soon as these well-paid activists prepare to sling some mud around."

In the most recent available tax returns, the South Atlantic Fishermen's Association received $39,000 in grant assistance from EDF in 2009, while the Gulf of Mexico Reef Fish Shareholders' Alliance netted more than $100,000 in EDF funding. A Florida based commercial fishing organization said the South Atlantic Fishermen's Association has received well over $200,000 from EDF for lobbying purposes and has run several ads in DC publications like Politico in support of catch share programs.

Gloucester Times reporter Richard Gaines said a key U.S. House committee's recent decision to cut $32 million from the Obama administration's funding request to further expand NOAA's fishery catch-share system has renewed a fierce ideological and political battle in DC, one which had begun last February when Rep. Walter Jones (R-NC) successfully led a 251-151 victory in opposition to catch shares within the Continuing Budget Resolution. The so-called Jones Amendment would've barred introduction of new catch share programs for this fiscal year, but was ultimately watered down in the Senate during the contentious budget debate last winter.

According to his staff, Rep. Jones is preparing to submit for the second time his amendment to stop catch shares in their tracks. "The congressman will resubmit the amendment from the floor which will allow no funding for the development or approval of new catch share programs," Joshua Bowlen, Jones's legislative director told the Times.

Donofrio has called that good news for anglers. "Catch shares placed solely on the commercial sector will forever memorialize allocation and will not allow our angling community to argue for increased quota, while catch shares in the recreational sector in the form of fish tags or state issued individual fishing quota (IFQ) will simply cap participation to a few privileged anglers and entities," he said.

According to the RFA, the recreational fishing community is being divided into the 'haves' and 'have not's' with the future of individual anglers hanging in the balance. "We're seeing private anglers asking to be treated differently from the for-hire folks, while at the same time a handful of charter boat captains are attempting to corner the market for themselves," said RFA's managing director Jim Hutchinson, Jr. "At a recent meeting in New York, one party boat captain asked that the recreational community get subdivided into commercial and private anglers, which drew a lot of angry looks in the room where I was sitting."

"We've seen this type of division in New England with cod and haddock already and how it's impacted both participation and access, this is not a door we should be opening in other regions," Hutchinson said.

RFA points to the South Atlantic and Gulf regions as examples of where sector separation and division amongst the recreational ranks could spell real trouble in terms of future access to the resource. A recently formed group called the Charter Fisherman's Association (CFA) which has allied itself with the EDF-funded Gulf of Mexico Reef Fish Shareholders' Alliance, describes itself as consisting of "like-minded charter operators and captains who are trying to advance new ideas in the charter-for-hire industry; a separate fisheries management plan for the charter-for-hire fleet is one of CFA's more immediate goals."

A recent letter to members of Congress signed by CFA's executive director Michael Miglini appeals to legislators to defeat any riders blocking the approval of limited access privilege programs in the Gulf. Claiming to be a recreational charter captain, Miglini already owns shares of grouper, snapper and tilefish in the Gulf of Mexico as an individual captain, and also is the owner of at least two other business enterprises (South Atlantic Fishing, Inc. and Great Sage, Inc.) which possess IFQ permits. Miglini, a former technology stock investor and construction company owner according to the Amarillo Globe-News, is also associated with other corporations called South Atlantic Grouper, Inc. and Decent Seas, Inc.

"What we're seeing in the Gulf region is that one captain may own multiple permits for harvesting allotted shares of fish, and the captain will head out with several tin boats stacked on top of one another on the deck of their dive boat, each with its own allotted IFQ permit in addition to the captain's primary boat," said Donofrio. "If this wasn't so deviously treacherous, it would almost be laughable." RFA recently signed on to a group letter with more than two dozen like-minded recreational and commercial fishing organizations calling a violation of basic human rights "by creating a privileged class of fishermen in a privatized industry."

RFA said the entire catch share initiative now being lobbied along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts by preservationists at EDF is based on the perception that fisheries management policies are failing. "NOAA Fisheries latest report shows that 84% of U.S. fish stocks are not subject to overfishing, noting that the majority of our nation's fisheries are at sustainable levels," said Donofrio. "We need to fix our federal law to allow anglers access to these rebuilding fisheries, we don't need to privatize our resource in the name of a few well-connected investors."

As reported previously in the Gloucester-Times, EDF vice president David Festa has spent the last two years urging private investors to help transform the nation's fisheries from a commonly held resource into negotiable commodities. "It's not telecom money, but it's real money," Festa advised a small but influential private audience of mutual and hedge fund managers and environmental non-government organization officials at an April 28 panel on Innovative Funding for Sustainable Fisheries and Oceans. Festa's projection was for a 400% return on the investment based on his own experiences with the imposition of catch shares in other fisheries.

"Thankfully the Gloucester and New Bedford press have kept the heat on this anti-fishing agenda," Donofrio said, adding "it's regrettable that very few members of our own recreational fishing news media have recognized this manipulative attack on America's right to fish."

VHFC MEMBER JIM STORY PASSES AWAY by Vince Sibona

Friday evening, July 15th, I received a phone call from Dorothy Story, Jim's mother. Jim passed away the night before. He had been in the ICU for 3 weeks. Dorothy started crying on the phone. She had just lost her husband Tom 7 months ago in December. Dorothy wanted us to know how much Tom and Jim loved the VHFC, that it was a great part of their lives. Dorothy said that she would like to make a small donation in memory of Tom and Jim to the VHFC to be used as we wished.

REFUELING YOUR BOAT SAFELY by Bill Logan

Learn how to prevent a tragedy at the fuel dock this boating season with six safety tips from Boat US...

The folks at Boat Owners Association of The United States just sent us a disturbing story about a boat explosion at a dock that resulted in the death of a 25-year old woman, and hospitalized four others that were onboard as well as the dock attendant. The accident happened while the recently purchased used boat was being refueled by its new owner for the first time.

Was this accident preventable? Boat US says a simple sniff test may have prevented this particular tragedy, and they sent us six tips for safely refueling your vessel that every boater should practice.

Unlike a car, boats have fuel tanks and engines located in enclosed spaces which often don't allow gasoline vapors to escape. Lifting the engine compartment hatch in an attempt to smell any lingering gasoline fumes is one of the best ways to make sure the blower is doing its job.

Now, here are the six refueling safety tips:

1. Always remove passengers from the boat, and re-board only after refueling is complete and the engine(s) restarted.
2. Engine should be turned off and do not operate any electrical switches, including the ignition.
3. Keep all doors, ports and hatches closed, and only open them when refueling is complete.
4. To prevent unintentional sparking, hold hose nozzle firmly against fuel fill (and not a rod holder, water tank fill or holding tank, which happens more often than you think). Also don't overfill.
5. After refueling, ensure engine compartment blower runs for at least four minutes. This may delay others waiting to fill up, but it's worth the wait.
6. A quick sniff test takes only a few seconds and is the most effective method for detecting fuel leaks. Always open the engine bay hatch (if boat is equipped) and smell the bilge area as well as any closed compartments or interior spaces.

For more information on safe refueling, visit www.BoatUS.com/foundation/refuel as well as several articles related to fueling on the Daily Boater.
